Warning Checklist

Does your partner...

1. Try to control your life?
2. Control the money?
3. Not allow you to work, or sabotage your efforts to work or go to school?
4. Follow you or try to prevent you from going anywhere by yourself?
5. Accuse you of cheating or show jealous and controlling behavior?
6. Monitor your time?
7. Isolate you from friends or family?
8. Put down or call you names?
9. Humiliate you in public?
10. Force you to do things you don't want to do?
11. Drive recklessly with you in the car?
12. Threaten to hurt or kill you?
13. Take away medication you need?
14. Use violence towards you and/or your children?
15. Make you have sex when you do not want to?

If you have answered yes to some or all of these questions, you may be involved in an abusive relationship.

What is Domestic Violence?

You do not have to be physically attacked to be in an abusive relationship. Abuse can be verbal, emotional, financial, physical and/or sexual. Domestic Violence is often defined as the use of power (verbal, emotional, physical, financial or sexual abuse) to control the relationship.

Financial Abuse is:

- Withholding information and controlling decisions regarding money.
- Not paying bills, which can lead to eviction.
- Not helping to pay other family expenses.
- Not allowing you to work.
- Setting you up to fail in your job or education efforts (by lack of cooperation such as refusing childcare and/or transportation or harassing you at work).
- Helping you financially only if you do what they tell you to do.

Making the decision to leave and be safe often results in losing financial support and a place to live. DVS are here to assist you.

How Can a Domestic Violence Specialist (DVS) Help?

Domestic Violence Specialists:

Are experienced in working with victims of domestic violence and know that the abuse is not your fault.

Will listen to you and help you figure out how to safely take the steps you are ready to take.

Know about resources in your community and will help you access them.

Will help you find a safe place for you and your children to stay if that is what is needed.

Can help you make a plan and take the steps needed to obtain economic self-sufficiency and/or financial stability.

Can answer your questions regarding safety, options and resources, and child support. They can also help you ask for more time to comply with some of the Transitional Aid to Families with Dependent Children (TAFDC) rules, if you need to due to the abuse (this is called a Domestic Violence (DV) Waiver).

These rules include the following:

- The Work Program
- The Time Limit on cash benefits
- The Family Cap
- School attendance for teen parents
- Cooperating with child support
